

TRAJECTORY

The work in Trajectory is collectively an investigation into regional + global changes that are brought on from human movement through our world. It is also about hope — about finding a home — which could be literal, symbolic or internal. We have all searched for a place to reside as we traverse time, distance & change.

Migration can mean so many things, as we navigate life we are all migratory in many ways. We move from youth to old age, from unlearned to learned, from despair to hope, from substantial to poor, from city to town, from able to disabled—always unfurling.

The different disciplines I use in this work try to reach people who respond differently to this meaning so that they may find something here that resonates with them. Something that will speak to what they may feel.
